The Heartbeat of Jewish Budapest

The JCC is a bold statement that Jews are an integral part of Hungarian and European life and here to stay. Its success matters to all who care about Jewish life abroad.

Today, with the vital support of Jews around the world, and the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (JDC) the Budapest JCC has become a central home for a Jewish renaissance in the heart of Europe.

At stake today is the very survival of this flourishing renaissance.

Movie night: Soul Exodus

after the film meet with the director

The story of five secretive characters, told with Klezmer music. Five 21st century young and not so young men someplace in the world. They are musicians in search for someone and something which might have been born in their imagination. Once upon a time in the beginning of the 20th century there lived a Klezmer musician and storyteller Prince Nazaroff. Many people don't believe he ever existed, but these five do. They have imagined him, and imagination can be stronger than reality. To this day, Nazaroff lives in them. They can't except that something could disappear forever. They call themselves 'The Brothers Nazaroff'.

Movie night: GROÓ Diána: Regina

In Berlin in 1935, Regina Jonas made history as the first officially ordained female rabbi. During the Second World War, knowing that she was to be sent to the concentration camps, she placed in her synagogue all her documents and the only photograph ever taken of her, trusting that in the event of her death there would be survivors who might be inspired by her thoughts and example. She died in Auschwitz in 1942, and was completely forgotten. Through her rediscovered official ordination papers, personal correspondence and newspaper articles she left behind, her story can now be told on television for the first time.

Movie night: The Yankles

A man looking for a second chance at life crosses paths with a team with practically no chance at all in this comedy. Charlie Jones (Brian Wimmer) is a former major league baseball player whose alcoholism ended his career in center field and ruined his personal life after his wife left him and he ended up in prison following his third drunk driving conviction. As part of his parole, Jones has to serve nearly 200 hours of community service, and while he's eager to coach an amateur team as part of his penalty, no one seems willing to take a chance on him.

Adam's stories

Adam is a young man in his early twenties. When he first came to the fitness center he was detached and had no Jewish identity at all. Slowly and slowly he started to learn and became interested and more self-secure in his Jewish roots. He comes from an intermarriage like so many of his peers. Today he volunteers regularly for the community center and has more and more Jewish friends.
